were exposed, and who were from charitable motives alone keeping their knowledge to themselves.

At the beginning of the war Henry G. Davis & Brother were in business at New Creek, Va. This was a station on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad of too little consequence to warrant the employment of a salaried station agent. The man who served as agent was one Armstrong, who owned some property near hy, and who charged a comnaission to the patrons of the road for his services. He also owned a small warehouse in which he stored freight received by the railroad, charging who consignees for such storage. Armstrong was notoriously disloyal and fied to the Confederacy at the outbreak of the war, remaining there until its close. New Creek became an important army supply depot early in the war. The Government seized the storehouse and used it for nine months, when more commedious buildings of its own were completed and put to use. The railroad companysent a special agent there named Lyons, who remained during the war in charge of the company's affairs, while the Government had its quartermasters all the time on the ground attending to its own interests. Laborers paid by the Government did the work of loading and unloading the stores. A year our two after the close of the war bills were presented to the Government by A. C. DAVIS & CO. bills were presented to the coverament of A. C. DAVIS & CO., of which firm the present Senator was a member, for $15,107 as commissions for unloading, loading and forwarding 1,507 cars. The claim was too indefinite to be made the subject of official action, and was returned to the claimants for a more specified statement of the details of the claim. It soon respecared, but in an entirely different form. Its first item was for rent of warehouses, $460. It contained charges for the services of laborers, clerks, and for those of T. B. Davis, agent and superintendent, the latter item being $2,000. The total of the new bill was $2,757 less than the original bill for commission. The accounting officer set about investigating both claims, although the latter was designed to be a substitute for the former. One of the claimants being questioned in regard to the items in the second bill acknowledged that they were fictitious, being put in that form to meet some supposed formal requirements of the Government.

IT WAS DISCOVERED A. C. DAVIS & CO.,

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER

IT WAS DISCOVERED that when, after the close of the war, Art strong returned home, he sold his property including the warehouse, to the Davi Brothers for $25,000, the same transaction conveying any claims that Armstrong might have sgainst the Government to the Davises. The latter set up the claim that this transaction was only the consumthat this transaction was only the consumation of an agreement made with Armstrong's father soon after Armstrong left for the South, and that they had virtually been the owners of the property occupied by the Government ever since. They produced no proof of such an agreement, and it would have been necless it they had.

produced no proof of such an agreement, and it would have been useless it they had. In regard to the alleged services rendered the Government both the railroad agent and the quartermaster who re-mained at New Creek during the entire war teetified that they had no official dealings with the Davises as representatives of the railroad, and that they had no knowledge of any such connection.

This claim has often been mentioned privately here as one of the most preposterous attempts to get pay from the government for services never readered, which has come to the knowledge of accounting officers for many years. Senator Davis has been actively pressing this claim for a long time, and should the time come when a Democrat fills the chair of Secretary of the Treasury the claim will be paid.

Maine, About Which We Have Heard So Euch Lately.

rection fifty miles up the river. There are eleven towns or organized plantations with an aggregate population of something like seven thousand five hundred, of which three-quarters or more are of French descent. The tailes from Acadia, immortalized in "Evangeline," were the first settlers of this valley, which, though in a higher latitude than Quebec, and oppressed by long and severe winters, of which some wonderful stories are told, is one of the most fertile and beautiful in New England. The original settlers and the Canadians who have joined them occupy a wide strip of intervale land along the banks of the St. John.

Travelers have often described the manners of this simple people. They are as unlike the Yankees fifty miles to the south of them as can well be imagined. They have no gonius for accumulation, no desire for improvement. They were born without ambition, and eojoylife accordingly. "The Lord got along well enough before we were born," they say, "and he will after we are gone." A New England man would call them shiftless. Their farming is of the most primitive order. There has been no change in the style of their building for a century, and manufactures they have none. Yet they are industrious in their way. Their wanta are isw and easily supplied. A few months' work at lumbering in winter provides what ready money they see during the year. The traders handle less money than anywhere else in the country. Barter is the rule, not the exception. They are a happy people, and the straing of a fiddle, such as can frequently be heard by the traveler, will at any time keep a dozen of them in contented idleness for half a sea. notice of any coming occurrences likely to be of interest to his flock, such as the fact that a trader will be at a designated place on a given day to buy cattle, for the people, it should be remembered, have no newspapers, and could not read them if they had. After mass, too, when an election approaches, the candidates for office are allowed and expected to harangue the people from the steps of the church. One sunday last year the writer saw the hat knocked from the head of a voung Portlander who was standing not in the church nor the vestibule, but some feat from the door and intending no disrespect.

An hour later, mass being over, an election as Representative from the very same spot. And this brings us to the matter of elections. The French vote has been practitically solid for the Democratic party, James C. Madigan, who died last year, could control every man of them. In national issues little interest is felt. The speeches which are made deal chiefly with local and county matters. A representative to the Legislature who wants receilection is held to a strict account for every set or vete of his which could have any bearing upon the welfare of the people.

For thirty years these Troches have been in use, with annually increasing favor.
